EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

The rarest skill in enterprise technology is not knowing the product — it is making industrial buyers say yes before the category language exists. That is what I have done for 18 years.

From DCIM at Schneider Electric to cyber-physical resilience at Dell Technologies to Physical AI and Agentic AI advisory today, my career is defined by one repeatable act: entering technically complex, long-cycle B2B markets early — building the GTM architecture that converts buyer skepticism into signed contracts at scale. I bridge the OT/IT divide, serving as the quarterback between product management and sales: translating Agentic AI and Industry 4.0 capabilities into buyer narratives that compress sales cycles, expand market share, and generate pipeline that compounds.

$150M+ documented revenue influence · $24M net-new pipeline · 42% win rate improvement (Dell) · 12%→38% market share in 18 months (Schneider)
